AN (Army-Navy) components adhere to strict Air Force-Navy specifications, ensuring reliability and performance in aerospace applications. These parts are crafted from materials such as cadmium or zinc-plated corrosion-resistant steel and anodized aluminum alloys, designed for durability under varying conditions. AN STANDARD are versatile, with critical dimensions such as length, grip, diameter, head type, and shank configuration, making them suitable for both ductile and shear applications. Each part is meticulously coded to meet specific standards, guaranteeing compliance with rigorous industry requirements. Refer to specification sheets to ensure the correct product for your needs.

HISTORY

AN STANDARDS were developed during World War II as part of a collaborative effort between the U.S. Army and Navy. This system streamlined logistics and ensured interoperability between military branches. The AN standards helped create a uniform parts system, reducing manufacturing complexity and increasing supply chain efficiency. These components played a vital role in shaping modern aviation part standardization.
